Butery of a Well-spent Life-His Princely Gifts to Educational and Chari-table Institutions-His Art Gallery.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24 .- Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the widely known philanthropist, died at 6:30 this morning. He passed away quietly and peacefully. There was no marked change in his condition. He remained unconscious up to the end. His breathing, which had become feeble as the night came on, was the only indication that he was alive. As dawn approached, the forces of his life reached the lowest ebb, and finally the action of the heart ceased. The low breathing was no longer noticeable, and the aged philanthropist was dead. Those about him saw yesterday that he was gradually reaching the limit of his strength. There was nothing that could be done for him, and the watchers could only witness the gradual fading out of life. When the last moment came he was surrounded by his relatives and friends. Mr. C. riage, who had been with him during his last illness almost constantly, was at his side. His voungest grandson, William Corcoran Eusone of the group about the bed. His brother George Peabody Eastle had just benolds of Norwich, Conn., a niece of Mr. Corcoran, who arrived here several days ago, was also present. Mr. James Corcoran. one of the nephews who lives on a ranch in Arkansas, and who arrived in this city yesterday, was present at the last moment. Mr. terday, was present at the last moment. Mr. Corcoran's faithful nurse was also at his side. His physician, Dr. Garnett, who had been with the sick man until a late hour, and had gone home, returned soon after Mr. Corcoran had passed away. A servant was quietly sent for an undertaker, and soon afterward the crape on the door announced to all passors by that the well-spent life of the philanthropist was spided.

william Wilson Corcoran, philanthropist, was born in Georgetown. D. C., on Dec. 27, 1798, selven years after his father. Thomas Corcoran, had taken up his abode in the little town. Mr. Corcoran's father came from Ireland in 1783, and settled in Baltimore, moving to Georgetown in 1787, and became one of its most prominent citizens. He served as Alderman, Mayor, and Postmaster for many years. W. W. Corcoran, before he was of age, formed a partnership with his elder brother, and was for some years prosperous as a tradesman. In 1824 financial disaster overtook the little business enterpise, and the lirm suspended. Although an honorable discharge was granted by the creditors, who were mainly Philadelphis merchants, Mr. W. W. Corcoran never relaxed his efforts until, in 1847, he had paid every dollar of the liabilities of the firm, with interest from the date of suspension—twenty-three years. In the United States Branch Bank, Mr. Corcoran, in early manhood, laid the foundations of his vast financial and banking knowledge, and subsequently he opened a broker's office on Fennsylvania avenue, west of Wilser's Hotel. In 1835 he married Miss Louise Amory Morris, a daughter of Commedore Morris, the distinguished naval officer. Mr. Corcoran's married life ended five years later with the death of Mrs. Corcoran, who lett him a son and a daughter.

the death of Mrs. Corcoran, who left him a son and a daughter.

Mr. Corcoran's son did not long survive his mother, and his daughter, Miss Louise Corcoran, was married in 1849 to the hon. George Eustis of Louisiena, and died in 1867, leaving three children. In 1841 Mr. Corcoran became financial agent of the State Department under Daniel Webster, and thus commeaced an intimacy with Webster, which continued until the latter's death. The Government was at this time in the most unfavorable fluancial condition, and efforts to negotiate a loan had failed both at home and abroad when Mr. Corcoran formed a partnership with Mr. Higgs and agreed to take a Government loan of $5,000,000 at 101. Mr. Corcoran's entire capital at the time did not exceed $50,000 and he led the bankers and financiers of the day in audacity and patriotism.

at 101. Mr. Corcoran's entire capital at the bankers and financiers of the day in audacity and patriotism.

The venture was from the start a success, and W. W. Corcoran from that time ranked among the world's famous financiers. The action of the firm of Corcoran & Riggs sustained the oredit of the country throughout the Mexican war, and by them the necessary loans were taken. In 1848 Mr. Corcoran went to England for the purpose of persuading the capitalists of London to accept American bonds, and so great was his success that he received an ovation upon his return. The day following Webster's great speech in the Senate, favoring the tlay compromise, Mr. Corcoran enclosed to Mrs. Webster all evidence of her husband's indebtedness, loans amounting to thousands of dollars. Webster all evidence of her husband's indebtedness, loans amounting to thousands of dollars. Webster all evidence of webster's retirement from the Cabinet Mr. Corcoran purchased his residence, which, with numerous improvements and extensions, continued to be Mr. Corcoran's home until his death.

In 1850 Mr. Corcoran presented to his native town the picturesque Oak Hill Cemetery, on which he expended $130,000. In 1847 Mr. Corcoran and the Prish famine. In 1857 he commenced the erection of the Corcoran Art Gallery, which was opened to the public as an art gallery in 1872, and inaugurated on Washington's birthday by a grand ball for the benefit of the Washington Monument.

The building and grounds cost $250,000; the collection of statues and pictures which were valued at $100,000. These treasures of art, which have been greatly added to, are practically free to the public, and that they are enoughed and appreciated is shown by the large number of visitors. There were during 1854 over 75,000 visitors to the gallery.

Almost contemporaneous with the gallery was the erection and endowment of the Louise Home by Mr. Corcoran. The building which bears that name is a very beautiful one, and is on Massachusetts avenue, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth stree of $250,000, and is managed by a board of nine trostees, who are ladies.

Mr. Peabody and Mr. Corcoran, who might be called twin philanthropists, were on the most inlimate terms for half a century. Mr. Corcoran had nundreds of letters which were written to him by Mr. Peabody. The letters in Mr. Corcoran's excellent library are of the greatest laterest. One of them is from Mr. Peabody when he was Mr. Corcoran's from Mr. Peabody to the Hungarian exiles, and says that he will have a strong competitor in deeds of benevolence when the writer himself gets rich. That his words were prophetic the world well knows. Mr. Corcoran presented the Trinidad tract to the Columbian University, to the Protestant Orphan Asylum the site for their building, and to Columbia Colleges its medical ball. His contribution toward the erection of Assension Church was $80,000. His denations to educational and theological institutions of the Southern States have been almost equally generous. In 1854 Mr. Corcoran retired from the firm of Corcoran & Riggs, and soon after made a European tour with ex-President Fillimore, during which he was the recipient of many distinctions. After his retirement, the management of his private fortune and the affairs of his grandchildren, together with the duties growing out of his innumerable charitable enterprises, kept him wall employed, and he daily visited his office in Higgs's Bank to attend to business. His literal acts of recent years are universally known; his supplemental sit of $20,000 to Ascension Church, the removal of John Howard Payne's remains, and the purchase of monuments to Payne and the late Bishop Pinkney are among a vasi number of generous deeds.

Since Mr. Corcoran retired from active bu

MR. MARSHALL'S UNFORTUNATE BABY. It Causes a Suit for Damages and Divorce,

Six years or more since John G. Marshall, then engaged in the fancy goods business in this city, met a handsome widow of middle age at a summer hotel at Long Branch. Mr. Mar-shall was himself a widower, his wife having left him with four children on her death some fow years before. The widow, on the other hand, said she had only one child-a little boy. A young man, who was also with her at the hotel, was represented by her to Mr. Marshall as her nephew. In due course the widow be-came Mrs. Marshall, despite the energetic remonstrances of her bridegroom's children, who are well grown. Mr. Marshall took her home to Brooklyn to live, where he had a house at 208 Hewes street.

In forming this alliance with the widow Mr. Marshall is said to have taken a great deal on faith. She represented berself as a connection of David Dows and of Banker Livermore, and re-

Marshall is said to have taken a great deal on faith. She represented Berself as a connection of David Dows and of Banker Livermore, and referred freely to other friends and relations. But she nover introduced her future husband to them. Before she was married, however, she did introduce him to her-drossmaker, whose account against the widew in the sum of $500 the trusting lover paid without a murmur.

For a short time after the wedding things fran pretty smoothly. Then the awakening began. First of all, Marshall discovered that the young man who was said by the widow to be her nephew before her marriage was in reality her own son. This revelation, of course, raised an unpleasant doubt about Mrs. Marshall was the constant presence in his house of his wife's sister-in-law. Mrs. Elizabeth Wortman.

Murshall had made considerable money in the fancy goods business, and, although he has now retired from business, he is regarded as being comfortably off. He is also very well connected, both in this city and Brooklyn, one of his sisters having married one of the Sloans brothers, of earset fame.

On April 12, 1834, Mrs. Marshall presented her husband with a fine baby girl, which, however, died two months later. The advent of this baby into the Marshall family has caused an immense amount of trouble. It has separated husband and wife, and will probably lead to an action for divorce, in which the husband will figure as plaintiff. Very shortly after the death of the baby Mr. Marshall made some astounding discoveries, which led him to break up his household, exile his wife, and bring a suit at law against his wife's sister-in-law, Elizabeth Wortman.

For this purpose he engaged the services of Henry Daily, Jr., a New York lawyer, who immediately opened fire upon Mrs. Wortman in the Supreme Court of Kings ecunty to recover $25,000 damages for conspiracy. The complaintiff, and also for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff worth and also for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff supreme Court of Kings ecunty to recover $

IS WM. BELDEN TOO SINFUL?

The Governors of the Stock Exchange are Investigating his Character.

The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange have undertaken a new job. which, while it may not enliven the market, is quite street. At their meeting on Thursday they pervestigate and determine whether the business William Belden is a proper one for Mr. Stokes to assume or for the Exchange to tolerate.

The Exchange has the right to do this, but there is a wide difference of opinion down town as to the advisability of what the authorities of ness of its failure to do its duty promptly in the Ives matter.

However that may be, a special committee of five, headed by Vice-President it, H. Thomas, has been appointed to investigate and report upon the moral fitness of Mr. William Belden as a partner for a member of the New York Stock Exchange. The other members of the committee are S. T. Russell, F. K. Sturgis, S. Tighman, and D. A. Boody.

The progress of this committee will be watched will great interest by the members of the Exchange. Some of them who know

The progress of this committee will be watched with great interest by the members of the Exchange. Some of them who know protty well how much Mr. Belden falls short of being immaculate are the most positive in their predictions that the committee has undertaken a job that it will be willing to throw up before any very tangible results are produced. The trouble, they say, will come in substantiating their estimate of Mr. Belden. It zoes without saying that he possesses shrewdness above the average, since he is one of the very few men who have succeeded in getting the best of Mr. Jay Gould, and the trouble the committee is likely to encounter in dealing with Mr. Belden is an absence of tracks.

Bosides, Mr. Belden's alleged sinfulness, unlike H. S. Ives's, has never been a matter of widespread publicity. That young gentleman had himself furnished the Stock Exchange with conclusive evidence of his lack of conscience and of business integrity long before the question of his copartnership with Mr. Thomas C. Doremus of the Exchange will find that Mr. Belden can light with the carnestness worthy of a righteous cause, and it will also find that he has friends that Ives nover could have called to his assistance.

HERE'S ALBERT NETTER AGAIN.

His Tastes are Such that he Can't be Kept Away from Wall Street. Mr. Albert Netter, the fugitive rehypothecator, has returned to town again. His recent absence, which dates from last summer, was occasioned by the action of the stock brokerage firm of E. P. Freeman & Co., which wanted Netter to give bonds to the extent of $40,000, Netter to give bonds to the extent of $40,000, pending the trial of their action to recover a similar amount which he defrauded them of when he and his brother swindled Wall street in the latter part of 1877.

After a good many years of enforced absence from the State Netter concluded that he wanted to come back to this city. He succeeded in compromising nearly all of the claims that were the result of the wholesale rehypothecations by Netter Brothers. He did not dispose of Freeman & Co's claim, and they, through Lawyor John R. Dos Passos, went for him last summer with so much defermination that he had to go under cover again.

He disappeared while in the custody of his counsel, Mr. Ligar M. Johnson. Recently the case was disposed of out of court, and in consequence Notter is again at large in Wall street.

Another Sudden Death on the Cotton Exchange.

Yesterday afternoon, shortly before the regular closing of business on the Cotton Ex-change, Mr. Chester Greene, one of the most active members, who had been skylarking with another member, moved uncertainly a few another member, moved uncertainly a few steps, and then fell on the floor. It was at first supposed that his fail was the result of some mishap. But he did not rise, and it was soon found that he was quite dead. Mr. Greene was 42 years of age, and leaves a wife and one child. It is supposed that his death was caused by disease of the heart. This is the second sudden death on the Cotton Exchange within the month.

Miss Coffin's mother testified yesterday that she had signed the petition of Trustee Wilby against her judgment, and that though she had not seen her daughter for eighteen months she still loved her. She said that her daughter's income was $\frac{1}{2}$ 400 a year, and that it would revert to Mr. Wilby, Miss Coffin's trustee, in case of the young woman's death.

The case was given to the jury at 7 o'clock, and aftor a few minutes' deliberation a verdict in favor of Miss Coffin was returned. Foreman Adon Smith read the verdict, which found Miss Coffin to be of sound mind and not incapable of managing herself or her property.

BUTLER BESTS NAGLE.

A Fight Between William Stickles and George Conklin Prevented by the Police. Late on Thursday night a lot of Newark sporting men met near the Watsessing station. between Newark and Bloomfield, to see a fight to the finish between Harry Nagle of Newark. who fought to a draw with Carney at Belleville last week, and young Butler of East Newark. who fought to a draw with Carney at Believille last week, and young Butler of East Newark. Frank Cavanagh, a local fighter, was Nagle's second, and Johnny Dolan acted for Butler, while Hugh Riley of East Newark was referee. Eight rounds were fought with bare knuckles, and both men were badly used up. For three rounds Butler acted almost entirely on the defensive, but in the fourth round he sailed in and did the greater part of the fighting, improving with each round until he fought Nagle to a standstill, and got the purse of $200.

The seconds, Cavanagh and Dolan, will fight next week for $250, and each has posted a forfeit of $50.

There was to be another fight near Newark yesterday morning, but Capt, McManus stopped it by arresting William Stickles, who was to have contested with light cloves with Georga Conklin of Jorsey City. The contestants and their friends met at Lew Brown's tavern, on the outskirts of the city, and a big stage was drawn up in front of the door to take them to the bittle ground. Conklin, it is said, was trying to back out of the fight, and delayed the departure so long that Lew Brown said: "I will give you a cold $100 if you will fight, win or lose."

Just then Capt. McManus dropped in with a couple of policemen. Stickles was arrested, and on his way to the Second precinct station he was seen to tear up a letter. The scraps were collected and pasted together. This is what the note was:

Some of the disappointed spectators paid $5 for tlekets to see the fight, and they said that Con. In was to blame for the failure, for they would have been off hulf an hour before the police came but for his backing out.

Cocking Main in Hudson.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Feb. 24.—Many sports attended a rattling cocking main at Hudson. N.Y., last night between Hudson and Chatham N.Y., birds. The main was for $10 each battle N.Y., birds. The main was for $10 each battle and $100 on the series, fighting under New York State regulations. Each side entered thirteen birds, but only seven on each side weighed in. The Hudsons were the favorites in the betting. Seven battles were fought. Chattam winning five and the main. The contests were all spirited, but the Chattham birds were in the best condition. About 300 spectators were present, and a great deal of money changed hands on each battle. "Hack" fights were inaugurated between Pittsfield birds and birds from Hudson and Chatham. Pittsfield won five out of six battles.

The strong feature of to-day's stock market was the so-called Gould group of stocks. Western Union was the most active, while Manhattan Railway, which was dealt in more extensively than usual scored the greatest improvement. The first half of the day the entire list showed a good deal of strength, and St. Paul. which led the list in point of activity, touched the highest price it has sold at in a good many weeks. The volume of business was a little larger than yesterday, and there was also a somewhat better distribution. At the same time the market was far from being active or broad. The room was encouraged to buy stocks early in the day, and by 3 o'clock it began to look as if it had been supplied with thom by the larger interests in the market. This would not be surprising considering the narrowness of the market and the limited marterial the few operators and cliques that are terial the few operators and cliques that are trying to keep speculation alive have to work

The upward movement in the Richmond Terminal stocks halted, as was to be expected, after yesterday's apparently artificial market in these stocks, and both the common and preferred experienced a moderate reaction. The street has figured out that about $3,000,000 has been absorbed by the Sub-Treasury from the city banks during the week, and consequently it looks for an unfavorable bank statement to-morrow. This belief led to the selling of stocks all around in the afternoon, so that the only improvement was in most cases lost. Exceptions may be noted in the Gould stocks, in Jersey Central, and in Lackawanna, all of which closed a little higher than yesterday, while the rest of the list left off unchanged or fractionally lower.

The street continues to deplore the inability of Congress to appreciate and deal with the most important questions before it, and without doubt Wall street, as usual, reflects the business of the entire country. Of news there was next to none. The current reports were of some lowering of rates by the Western roads. incidental to the more important cuts that have already been announced. A report that attracted some attention and provoked a denial from the officials of the Pennsylvania Ratiroad was that that company is pro-rating with some of the roads west of Chicago on through busiof the roads west of Chicago on through business taken at the cut rates. The foreign situation was generally regarded as more favorable in overy respect. At the same time this feeling was not reflected in the London market, if indeed it existed there. The labor troubles of the Reading and other coal mining corporations are gradually dropoing out of sight, and every one is prepared to hear at an early day of a resumption of work in the Lehigh region. In the Unlisted Department there were sales of Cotton Oil Trusts at 30% to 30%. Chicago Gas Trusts at 36 to 35. Duluth. South Shore and Atlantic preferred at 30 to 29%, Georgia Pacifica t21 to 21%, and its mortgage bonds at 100% and 2ds at 52%, and Western National Bank at 37 to 96%. The clossing was steady, but the market was very quiet after it began to react.

BY THE GREAT MODERN MASTERS. "It is now generally admitted that the artistic and commercial value of this collection averages higher han any in this country."

From the N. Y. World.

"The collection should be seen and studied by every one, for no more unique and powerful representation as one, for no more unique and powerful representation as a whole of the works of the masters of modern French art can be seen either here or abroad. The unquestioned works of the famous painters who are represented in this collection are being more and more widely scattered and more and more securely held, and it cannot be many years before the securing of any such representa-tion by any one individual will be in course of events

"Mr. Spencer's first collection attracted a great deal of attention, and gave him considerable reputation as an amateur. This reputation he has much added to of late years by the quality of his purchases, a number of which have been admired at various lean exhibitions. The public display of his present gathering will firmly establish bit forms as a tolerious and substituted collection. lish his fame as a judicious and enlightened collector It contains nearly a score of works of the first rank
